What Makes Jemison Special?

Mae C. Jemison High School first opened the 2016-2017 school year. It is named for Mae Jemison, a native of nearby Decatur, Alabama who was the first African-American female Astronaut. The school contains a magnet program called the College Academy which works alongside The University of Alabama in Huntsville to provide students with college credit throughout high school.

Mae C. Jemison High School serves the residents of North Huntsville as well as students from around the city who apply to and are selected to become part of the College Academy. Mae C. Jemison High School provides academic, extra-curricular, and athletic opportunities for the students at all grade levels.
